Oh Jeffrey, u r so funny and predictable. Well you are a man (or more like a little excited boy) so i understand. I just wanted to believe that maybe it would work without "playing". I knew i was wrong but i still had a little hope. For me sex is the most intimate thing. But i guess i dont have a choice here. Haha

I know how much u helped me. I know i would be most likely back in [REDACTED] right now without u, working in McDonalds...

So we r both in NY this week. Its been a long time, i guess i can try and see how its gonna feel again. I dont promise anything but thats the best i can do... To try. Haha u always get ur way. Anyway what about that art fair tmrw? Is that offer still on a table?

no play, is ok, but..... it makes little sense. I have been there for you and have always tried to do as much for you as i can, . you feel comfortable asking for advice, which is much more intimate than play it seems you may have forgotten, the lesson on giving versus receiving,, be careful.....you ask for advice, time and guidance, I will always give it.

the price you can pay, if you want it would be 30 k for 1000 shares so this guy is ripping your father off. no need to buy it now, treat it like a guy ,, he is interesting he will be around for a very long time,, no rush to get in , you can always participate later. . thanks for the photo. I miss our fun

Good morning. I have a question for u. :)
What do u think about FB going IPO?
Because some brokerage company offers my dad a deal that he can buy some shares now before it goes on market on may 18th but i dont like their price it seems really high .The minimum to invest is $50k for 1000 shares. So $50/1 share. And of course my dad doesnt have 50k, and was asking me to join w about $20k or so.
So my concern is that if its a good investment in general to buy FB. And if so then whats the best way to buy and if to keep it long term or just trade it asap afterwards. It seems like a great idea but for some reason im not so sure about it. Im really interested about what u think. Thank you
