Thanks for the introduction [REDACTED]. By the way, we have been friends for about 4 years now, so doesn't that qualify for more than being a 'new friend'?

Jeffrey, very nice to meet you by email. I have heard [REDACTED] talk about you a number of times, always with great admiration.

It would be interesting to speak with you, in confidence, about your idea. I am in Oregon with spotty cell phone coverage, so will try you tomorrow.

Best regards,

Alex

Alex - I want for you to meet Jeffrey Epstein. I can vouch for a full 20 years of bad behavior on his part...Jeffrey has been a big part of my life for almost that long. He made me stay in med school. He helped me stick to the things that were credible (as much as I wanted that modeling career) and of course continues to be a great source of support for me.

Jeffrey - Alex is one of my new friends. He came to Seattle to be the CFO of the gates foundation but found the leadership and vision to be both constraining and uncreative. Alex is very shy and quiet. He climbs mountains a lot. His current world (VC) is around buying and selling stuff like boat companies. But I think his creative mind would really benefit from some tough ideas. Venture capital is just a little uncreative for him! Alex is very, very, very trustworthy. Did I also mention shy?!

SO

Jeffrey has had the idea of a microcurrency for quite some time. I tried to bring it up internally but got shut down almost immediately. Stable, corruption-proof, very straight forward. It doesn't work with domestic governments for the obvious reasons plus issues come up with taxation.

He has been speaking with the UN DG and it might be that this is the right fit and way for the UN to get ahead of the markets and fickle donors by creating the UNEC (UN economic currency). Confidentially, he and the interested UN parties had thought maybe Larry Summers might be the guy to run this but I think we all know that probably would introduce an additional (both marketing and operational) barrier. Radioactive.

I suggested that you meet by email and speak by phone. [REDACTED]
You are both copied on this mail AND JEE's phone is [REDACTED]

Alex - CONFIDENTIAL PLEASE.
